American Agri-Women urges Congress to act on ag labor

Agriculture is uniquely in crisis regarding the need for a legal workforce is the message American Agri-Women conveyed at meetings with their congressional delegates during Fly-In in the nation’s capital.

Congress must act. The Emergency Agriculture Relief Act (EARA) was proposed as an amendment to the supplemental spending bill to fund military activities in Iraq and Afghanistan, but was removed, so now agriculture organizations are working hard to get the EARA moved forward on its own.

“The cost of waiting is to lose production and our food stability and security. The EARA is a solution within reach that avoids controversy and effectively addresses the problem on an emergency basis,” stated AAW president Marcie Williams, and is the message these ag leaders want their legislators to understand. “Our crops are rotting in the field and farming operations are moving to Mexico and we need relief now.”

This legislation is not amnesty. It does not provide a path to citizenship or a green card but would grant temporary, limited immigration status for experienced farm workers who would be required to continue to work in American agriculture for the next five years. The bill also reforms and streamlines the H-2A program.

AAW appreciates the work of several members of the Senate Appropriations Committee who showed their strong bipartisan majority support: Democratic Senators Inouye (HI), Leahy (VT), Harkin (IA), Kohl (WI), Murray (WA), Mikulski (MD), Feinstein (CA), Durbin (IL), and Johnson (SD), and Republican Senators Stevens (AK), Specter (PA), Domenici (NM), Bond (MO), Bennett (UT), Craig (ID), and Brownback (KS).

Agriculture In The Classroom founder and charter AAW member Jean Ibendahl of DuQuoin, Illinois, turned 90 years old during her trip to the American Agri-Women (AAW) conference in Washington, DC, on June 10. A reception was held in her honor at the USDA where over 100 AAW members and guests honored her with a cake and book of remembrances.

Jean is a former school teacher and author who was married to Calvin Ibendahl. Their historic farm, established in 1850 near Tamoaroa, was an underground railroad station during the Civil War. They grew corn, wheat, and soybeans on the farm for 44 years, then donated it to Southern Illinois University in Carbondale.

Jean is a tireless supporter of agriculture. In 1977 when she learned that Illinois schools had a mandate to include lessons on agriculture in their schools, she developed Agriculture In The Classroom to teach agriculture’s place in the U.S. economy. She also attended the organizational meeting of AAW in 1974 in Milwaukee, WI, and served as vice president under Carolyn Leavens in 1984-85.

Jean and Calvin also initiated the Daughters of American Agriculture Scholarship in 1991, which they have generously supported through the years. This scholarship is available to any farm, ranch or agribusiness woman or her daughter between the ages of 18-23 to pursue accredited courses in ag leadership, communications, rural sociology, medicine, or any other courses directly benefiting agriculture.
Greetings From Your President

Central Ohio is in its typical summer mode of hot and humid temperatures. Crops have been planted, replanted and in some cases washed out again. Many are just grateful to have crops in the ground. We chose to plant corn early and those fields look good. Others have been replanted due to water on corn fields and slugs in the soybeans. Army worms are reported in south central Ohio wheat fields but our wheat seems good at this time. It looks to be about three weeks before wheat harvest here.

Due to such extreme storms and flooding in the Midwest, it’s hard to have an accurate crop report. Prices are jumping all over the place making marketing decisions impossible. The National Ag Statistics Service surveyed farmers in the first two weeks of June but there are no plans at this time for any sort of special crop update. The USDA says, “It’s impossible to get out there right now; the roads are impassable, phone lines are down; we can’t contact farmers.” USDA will re-survey Midwest farmers, but that acreage update will not be released until August 12th.

On a lighter note, our 2008 Fly-In was a huge success with a record number of members attending. The hot humid temperatures did not stop anyone from our visits. Our Symposium entitled “Who’s Feeding the Hysteria? Find the Sensible in Sensationalized Issues” was attended by many outside groups and accessible to members via a conference call. The message was the same from all panelists, agriculture has to speak up or our businesses will ultimately be directed by activist groups.

One interesting item was presented by Steven Kopperud: the Humane Society of the United States (HSUS) is not part of your local or state Humane Societies. They do not protect animals, spay or neuter animals or collect money for the care of animals but are the largest activist group for animal welfare. The HSUS has been very effective in deceiving the population at large, and most think they are a humane society and the direct opposite of groups like PETA. The truth is the HSUS is a big part of the same animal rights movement as PETA, and holds the same ideals, only the tactics differ. The HSUS was officially converted from an animal welfare to an animal rights advocate by a membership vote at their 1980 annual meeting.

Our thoughts and prayers go out to our members in the Midwest states that are experiencing such dramatic weather conditions. As seen on several television reports this can take years for families to recuperate their losses. American Agri-Women across the country are willing to execute what ever contributions are needed to assist those who are feeling the unfortunate hand of nature. If anyone knows of a member in need please do not hesitate to notify me. Our motto of “We can do it together” stands in cases of hardship as well as promotion.

Three good tours

Tours will revolve around the value of agribusiness and agritourism, a treasure for the urban population.

Spouses and guests will tour the LBJ Ranch on Thursday.

The Lyndon B. Johnson National Historical Park is located on the north side of the Pedernales River in Stonewall, Texas. A park ranger will board the bus for a guided tour as we travel Ranch Road 1 to the 36th President and Lady Bird Johnson’s, “Texas White House,” the family cemetery, and views of Central Texas ranchlands. The Johnsons’ love of the land is plain to see in a short film in the visitor center. The center also includes a bookstore and gift items.

We will meander west on Hwy 290 to Woodrose Winery in Stonewall, Texas and enjoy wine tasting in a laid-back atmosphere and lunch under the Live Oak trees.

Returning to The Menger we will drive by the LBJ Boyhood Home in Johnson City, Texas.

The Friday Tour: It’s all about being a “Foodie” and asking, “Is this a grocery store”?

AAW will have the opportunity to visit one of two food retailers that originated in the Lone Star State, Central Market and Whole Foods. A retailer guide explains their award winning and unique style.

Don’t worry. There will be time for you to shop for Texas products. The tour takes AAW to Market Square (aka) El Mercado, San Antonio’s romantic center of the Mexican culture, with specialty boutiques. The tour includes a drive-by of the San Fernando Cathedral, the oldest cathedral sanctuary in the United States before returning to the Menger.

Yee Haw — AAW convention to be in beautiful, historic San Antonio, Texas!

The American Agri-Women convention will be in San Antonio, Texas at the historic Menger Hotel this year and what a place to go!

The Menger Hotel was constructed in 1859 and occupies a prominent location in downtown San Antonio, only 100 yards from the site of the Alamo. The Menger has housed personalities such as Theodore Roosevelt, Babe Ruth, Mae West, Robert E. Lee, Ulysses S. Grant, and Sarah Bernhardt, just to name a few.

Some of the amenities include an outdoor pool, fitness center, player piano, the famous Menger Bar and courtyard garden. There is free high speed internet access in all guest rooms.

The hotel is adjacent to Rivercenter Mall, the IMAX Theater, River Walk and much more. When you make your reservations, be sure to tell them whether you prefer a Victorian-styled room or one of the more modern ones.

On your first night, Wednesday, you can experience a leisurely Mexican dinner (margaritas are possible!) floating on the river barges enjoying the sights and sounds of San Antonio. OR sail the San Antonio River as you sample Texas tapas paired with wine. After dining, you can continue your evening enjoying the sights, music and night clubs all along the River walk.

But don’t party too hardy as we start bright and early Thursday morning with a JAVA Walk that can be as energetic as you want it to be, depending on how many calories you want to burn!

Meetings (gotta have them!) will be most of the day, and at noon the Town Hall Meeting will be held. The International Panel will add another country from last year’s convention. Mexico will be included along with Canada and the United States (that’s us!) so bring your questions and comments for all to discuss.

That evening at dinner we have invited Tim Findley, an investigative reporter, who writes for Range Magazine and can probably tell you anything you want to know about the American cowboy and his life in the West.

Friday morning we have invited Texas Governor Rick Perry and Agriculture Commissioner Todd Staples to briefly speak to us. This will also be the day all registrants will take a tour highlighting the treasures of agriculture, San Antonio and Texas. See Tours PR for more information.

Saturday will be a busy day – we have a lot planned for you! We have invited several speakers to bring you up to date on many issues affecting U. S. farmers and ranchers, including immigration, Trans-Texas Corridor/NAFTA Highway and global warming. You won’t want to miss this.

The Invitation to our 2009 Convention will be given at our Noon Luncheon. You will never guess where it is going to be! These ladies ALWAYS put on a good show.

Saturday afternoon and evening is jam-packed with action. Have you ever seen a “Champagne Cowboy”? Well, you will tonight. And there’s a style show too — and we just might have another little surprise for you. But you will have to wait until Saturday night to find out what it is.

Oh! And don’t forget to dress western at our banquet. As a fitting end to this wonderful night, we will install officers and acknowledge many hard-working and deserving individuals with awards. Will you be one of them?!

So, come on down to Texas. Experience and enjoy our Texas hospitality and you’ll have some good ‘ole’ memories to take home. Hope to see YOU’AL in November!
Symposium speakers stress importance of adapting agriculture’s message

Misconceptions about agriculture and food abound, as American Agri-Women (AAW) symposium speakers pointed out at the 15th Annual AAW Symposium in Washington, DC.

Most people do not know the importance of biotech foods, or how much $6 a bushel corn costs to produce, or that without the preventive use of antibiotics our animals are at risk for disease and yet advocates for agriculture are not getting their message out to the public in a meaningful or relevant manner, such as by using the Internet to their advantage or by continually repeating their message.

As Sharon Bomer Lauritsen, Executive Vice President of the Food and Agriculture Section, Biotechnology Industry Organization (BIO) pointed out, adapting agriculture’s message is critical and needs to focus on environmental concerns such as water and land conservation and the importance of food independence and safety, as BIO has learned.

Each speaker gave vital information about advances in productivity, food safety, costs, and how biofuels actually lower our energy costs, plus several misconceptions propagated by animal activists. Educating the public continually is critical to staying ahead on issues.

Speakers included Joel Neuman, President and CEO, American Feed Industry Association; Amy Philpott, Vice President Marketing and Industry Relations, United Fresh Produce and Steve Kopperud, Senior Vice President, Policy Directions, Inc., a government affairs company specializing in production agriculture, food and research/health related issues.

Sixteen AAW members took advantage of the opportunity to go to the USDA’s National Agriculture Statistics Service (NASS) Lock Up, where we got our picture taken with Acting Secretary of Agriculture, Charles F. Conner.

USDA Lock-Up a fascinating experience

By Jody Elrod, Texas Agri-Women

Tuesday, June 10, 2008, American Agri Women once again had the distinct privilege, allowed only to a select few, to attend the USDA’s National Agriculture Statistics Service (NASS) Lock Up.

Lock up refers to a series of measures taken to protect market sensitive data before it is released to the public. These measures have been in place for over 100 years and are taken very seriously.

Once through very thorough security, our group was met by an excited Carol House, Agriculture Statistics Board (ASB) Chairman. She was eager to address us knowing that when visitors arrived it meant it was daylight. Her day began around midnight and ends after the Secretary or Acting Secretary of Agriculture signs the crop report – this usually take place around 8:30AM. Also at that time, the information is released to the public.

Statisticians briefed Acting Secretary of Agriculture, Charles F. Conner, not only of market conditions for crops, but also production forecast and weather conditions. The statistics used for the crop report are derived from several different avenues, one being the Agriculture Census Report. The next time a census report arrives in your mailbox . . . remember its importance.

All NASS reports are available free of charge on the internet at www.nass.usda.gov.

AAW issues taken to Congress

1. Immigration reform

Position: AAW supports the Emergency Ag Relief Act. Please support the Emergency Agriculture Relief Act for farms and farmworkers.

Agriculture is uniquely in crisis regarding the need for a legal workforce. Congress must act. The cost of waiting to act is to lose production and our food stability and security. EARA is a solution within reach that avoids controversy and effectively addresses the problem on an emergency basis.

The legislation is not amnesty. It’s an emergency agricultural worker bill which will give protected status to those workers who have worked in agriculture within the last 48 months. Workers must work at least 100 days a year in agriculture for the next five years, and a five-year sunset is included. The bill also reforms and streamlines the H-2A program.

2. Climate change legislation

Position: AAW is concerned about legislation that would impose costly regulations on Americans, with no real benefit to the climate.

U.S. farmers’ cost of doing business could increase by 6 to 12 billion dollars as a result of new climate change regulations and rising energy prices according to a study conducted recently by Doane Advisory Services (Doane). The study, which was conducted by Doane for The Fertilizer Institute (TFI), analyzed the energy price impacts of S.3036 (formerly S.2191), “America’s Climate Security Act ” (Lieberman-Warner) on eight major U.S. crops and indicates that if enacted, the legislation will lead to a significant decline in farm income.

3. Secure retirement

Senators Hillary Clinton (D-NY), Susan Collins (R-ME), Kent

StART committees are the backbone of AAW

Our Strategic Action Response Team (StART) Committees are contributing factors to the success of American Agri-Women. Without them it would be impossible for our members to receive all the timely information they need on issues of importance to their business.

Through the years AAW has added, deleted and changed our committees to better serve our members. Technically speaking, at the end of each year committees are ended and at the beginning of the next they are appointed as needed, although AAW continues to keep committees for the two years of the current president’s term.

At the present two very important committees are without chairmen: Food Safety and Crop Protectants (previously Ag Chemicals). With the amount of national coverage on food-borne illnesses, AAW needs someone to step up and take over monitoring these events. The other committee of Crop Protectants is just as important with activists’ attempts to remove these tools from our hands. If there is someone who is interested in chairing either of these committees please contact president Marcie Williams.

These two committees require little additional work than what most of us are already doing: watch for media coverage and report any false statements to the appropriate sources, provide critical information to our members when you find sources of accurate materials, attend our Mid Year meeting to give a report, and assist in policy making and attend our annual meeting, if possible. A small amount of expenses are covered for your time and supplies.

Please consider being a StART Committee chairman. Contact President Marcie Williams at president@americanagriwomen.org or call her at 740-893-2624. The success of AAW is only as great as it’s members and their volunteerism.

News Briefs

What comes after the rains?

Sources said as much as 1-3 million acres could be lost across the Midwest due to this season’s heavy flooding, and perhaps another 2 million acres will see significant yield reductions. To be sure, thousands of acres across Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin and Missouri are either under water or expected to be under water as levees break and overflowing rivers from several states start their natural progression into the mighty Mississippi River.

Iowa is the hardest-hit of the Midwestern states, but farmers there are not alone. In Indiana, state officials said it was the worst disaster in 100 years. According to the Iowa Department of Agriculture, the extreme weather had either prevented planting or drowned out 9% of the state’s corn crop (1.5 million acres) and 20% (about 2 million acres) of the soybean crop.

But with corn and soybean futures hitting record highs, will some farmers venture to replant? We’ve seen other reports estimating that as many as four million acres will be replanted. Even USDA’s widely anticipated June 30th crop report may not be able to accurately assess the damages. Surveys for that report began on May 30 and ran through the first two weeks of June.

Plant on CRP now?

Sen. Charles Grassley (R-IA) wants the Bush administration to allow farmers to plant crops now on CRP acres to hold down skyrocketing corn and soybean prices. In a letter sent Friday to Secretary Ed Schafer, Grassley asked USDA to allow landowners to remove land from the program without penalty and plant soybeans, sorghum, milo or hay. This will allow new feedstocks to be grown this year, relieving pressure from our already strained row crop acres planted or still under water.

New eco-heresies:

Here, then, are some Wired’s potential of genetic engineering...

...nuclear energy or the transformational carbon-free electricity supplied by We can’t afford to ignore either the warming requires slaughtering some of environmentalism’s sacred cows. We can’t afford to ignore either the carbon-free electricity supplied by nuclear energy or the transformational potential of genetic engineering...

Here, then, are some Wired’s new eco-heresies:

Air conditioning is good: “As a symbol of American profligacy, the air conditioner may rank second only to the automobile... But this stereotype gets it wrong. When it’s 0 degrees outside, you’ve got to raise the indoor thermometer to 70 degrees. In 110-degree weather, you need to change the temperature by only 40 degrees to achieve the same comfort level... In the Northeast, a typical house heated by fuel oil emits 13,000 pounds of CO2 annually. Cooling a similar dwelling in Phoenix produced only 900 pounds of CO2 a year.”

Organics are not the answer: Wired notes that organic farms yield less food per acre. Actually, the organic yields are only about half as high as conventional because the world has an urgent shortage of manure. So all-organic farming would give up half the current world food output, threatening hunger for billions and extinction for species whose wild forests get cleared to plant more low-yield crops. Additionally, organic steers are on pasture much longer, burping up twice as much methane per pound as a feedlot steer, according to the UN’s FAO—and needing three times as much of the world’s scarce land.

Farm the forests like fields: Old-growth forests have a problem. “A tree absorbs roughly 1,500 pounds of CO2 in its first 55 years. After that, its’ growth slows and it takes in less carbon. Left untouched, it ultimately rots or burns and all that CO2 gets released... The most climate-friendly policy is to continually cut down trees and plant new ones. Lots of them.” Use the wood to build durables such as furniture and houses, says the magazine.

Accept biotechnology: New nitrogen-efficient genetically engineered crops need only half as much nitrogen fertilizer—which Wired says could save a whopping 50 million tons worth of CO2 emissions per year, with almost no leftover fertilizer to leach into streams. An organic dairy cow, with no boost from biotech growth hormone, gives eight percent less milk. That means more cows, eating more feed, and emitting more methane, to produce organic milk that contains identical growth hormones.

Embrace nuclear power: “Nukes are the most climate-friendly industrial-scale form of energy.” A recent British government white paper says that from uranium mining to decommissioning, a nuclear power plant emits only 2 to 6 percent of the carbon per kilowatt-hour as natural gas. “Embracing the atom is key to winning the war on warming... One of the Kyoto Protocol’s worst features is a sop to greens that denies carbon credits to power-starved developing countries that build nukes—thereby ensuring they’ll continue to depend on filthy coal.”

We commend Wired for indeed focusing on environmental first principles. Now, if some additional warming actually occurs after our ten-years-and-counting vacation from higher temperatures . . .

The VOICE of the American Agri-Woman 9

Conrad (D-ND), Gordon Smith (R-OR), and Olympia Snowe (R-ME), and Representatives Stephanie Tubbs Jones (D-OH) and Phil English (R-PA) and a host of co-sponsors reintroduced the Retirement Security for Life Act. The bipartisan legislation seeks to provide an incentive that would encourage Americans to invest in retirement vehicles that provide steady income for life, such as lifetime annuities. We appreciate the support of the co-sponsors and encourage other members to co-sponsor these bills.

This is an important measure for self-employed individuals, such as many farmers and ranchers, and for women.

4. Ethanol and food prices

Position: AAW believes American agriculture can effectively produce to meet the demand for food, feed and fuel.

There are many factors that have increased the cost of corn prices, and ethanol is just one of those, accounting to perhaps 10-30% of the increase. Rising energy costs, the value of the dollar and its impact on exports, and speculative trading by outside investors are other factors.

Ethanol provides a positive energy balance, benefits the environment and serves to limit the increase in gasoline prices. If not for ethanol, world oil demand would cost the consumer more than $50 billion in additional fuel costs.

5. Oceans policy

First and foremost, H.R. 21 has the potential to alter significantly the nation’s regulatory landscape and to do so in ways that are unpredictable and that may go well beyond Congressional intent. Specifically:

- The bill establishes a national ocean policy (NOP), which must be implemented according to specified principles. The policy and the principles are vague, in some cases controversial, and fail to allow for a genuine balancing of competing needs and interests.
- The authorities granted and the actions compelled could well elevate national ocean policy above many, if not all, other considerations that should be weighed and balanced when making land and resource use decisions.
- If enacted, H.R. 21 would almost certainly open a floodgate of litigation, as federal agencies are challenged on their interpretation and application of the NOP across their respective programs, their consistency determinations, and ultimately their issuance of permits, licenses and other individual actions taken by the agencies. Because the courts will be the ultimate arbiter of the scope and application of the new oceans policy, its full implications will probably not soon be known or fully understood for years.

6. Horse slaughter

Position: AAW opposes legislation to ban horse slaughter in the United States.

The elimination of horse slaughter facilities in the United States has had the opposite effect of protecting horses – a great example of unintended consequences. Instead of being processed at USDA regulated plants and transported under regulations the horse industry helped formulate, horses destined for processing endure longer truck rides and an uncertain fate at Mexican processing plants. Additionally, thousands of horses that otherwise would be processed are neglected and many are abandoned. Because the processing market has been closed off, these horses are being placed on the active market, causing a drop in horse prices across the board.
American Agri-Women is seeking an editor for this newsletter. If you are interested or have questions, please contact Arlene Kovash by phone, 503-838-3512, or by email at communications@americanagriwomen.org. This is a 2-year paid position and may be renewed. Job description is as follows:

The editor prepares five to six 8-12 page newsletters for publication per year and works under the direction of the President and the Vice-President for Communications.

It is the responsibility of the editor to solicit articles for the Voice from affiliate organizations, officers and committees. The editor also writes articles as needed. The editor is responsible for page layout and design.

All articles and priority of articles must be approved by the President and Vice-President for Communications. The draft newsletter is to be presented to them and any others designated by the President to serve as an editorial committee for the purposes of proof-reading the Voice, at least three days prior to sending the Voice for printing.

The editor makes all edits as directed by the President and Vice-President for Communications and delivers the final proof for printing. The editor emails a PDF version of the Voice to those members who choose to receive it by email and to the web master for uploading to the website.

The editor also attends the AAW annual meeting and mid-year meeting and takes pictures and reports on those meetings for the Voice.

If there are any questions about the position or on making a bid for this position, please contact Vice President of Communications Arlene Kovash, akovash@earthlink.net, or 503-838-3512.
