

For Immediate Release

American Agri-Women Award 2018 Daughters of American Agriculture Scholarship to Allie Poole

Allie Poole

Burlington, VT (AgPR) Sept. 7, 2018 — American Agri-Women have named Allie Poole, Central City, Kentucky, the 2018 winner of their Daughters of American Agriculture Scholarship, High School Graduate (18-23 years old).

She is currently enrolled in the Auburn University College of Veterinary Medicine, Auburn, Alabama.

Ms. Poole has completed a minor degree in Chemistry and the Honors program with an exceptional grade point average. Many of the laboratory sessions in Animal Science courses require the ability to work as an individual or in a group effort to accomplish required tasks. Allie developed an honors research project evaluating the potential value of thermal imaging in relationship to predicting when birth would occur in horses.

In consideration of dedication to the development of her professional choice, Allie has developed an extensive background of related work experience. In addition to extensive animal handling opportunities within the college coursework, she has gained significant experience working at multiple veterinary clinics, the equine center at Berry College as well as international experience in Thailand with domestic animals and elephants. Being involved in numerous clubs and organizations, often in leadership roles, Allie is more than willing in sharing and helping others achieve their goals. She is clearly dedicated to her professional calling.
